The Impact of Women in Service Programs

- Women have been engaged in supporting fatherhood as researchers, practitioners, policymakers, advocates, and mothers for decades.
- Predominance of women in helping professions.
- Low-income nonresidential fathers are generally excluded from social work education, practice, research, and policy.
- There is a lack of research on effective female practitioner-male client relationships.

A Needed Conversation

The way service providers view and treat fathers is important because the pre-suppositions, life experiences, and cultural influences they may bring to their work can themselves be barriers to effective compliance and healthy, effective father-child engagement.

Group Activity:
What are some challenges for female staff working with fathers? What are some reasons it is beneficial to have women working with fathers?
Power, Race, and Gender Considerations

• Possible gender transferences and counter transferences:
  ▪ Clients’ unconscious reactions to practitioners
  ▪ Clients’ anger and mistrust of systems
  ▪ Sexual/Erotic Transference

• Practitioners’ subjective treatment of clients:
  ▪ Maternal transferences and counter-transferences
  ▪ Power to assess, intervene, give and withhold resources, refer back to child support, incarcerate, deny parenting certificate
  ▪ Attempts to compensate for their own sense of powerlessness
Power, Race, and Gender Considerations Cont.

Remember:

• All new relationships with persons in authority or positions of power begin tentatively.
• African American men have a justifiable and “healthy mistrust” of practitioners and programs.
• Respect and trust are some of the keys to overcoming this initial resistance.
• Underneath anger is pain, frustration, and feelings of powerlessness.
• Practice compassion through active listening, flexible assistance, and accountability.
Critical Questions for Staff

• How do service providers define “responsible fatherhood?”
• How do your personal and professional experiences affect your definition?
• Who is a part of the family?
• Who will benefit from the services provided?
• How will looking at the whole picture benefit the children? And the parents?
• How can we make this happen?
Critical Conversation: What Female Providers Can Do

• Professional competence is the key to effective practice.
  ▪ Understand the power dynamics: gender, race, and socioeconomic status considerations—you have power based on your professional position!

• Be aware of your own possible biases.

• Volunteer or cross train with Fatherhood organizations.

• Challenge practices and policies that are gender biased.

• Remember the challenges—current and historical—faced by many fathers.
  ▪ Always be empathetic.
Critical Conversation:
What Female Providers Can Do
Cont.

• Believe in the abilities, talents and strengths of men regardless of their needs.
• Understand that Dads are equal parents.
• Understand that systems aren’t as “Dad-friendly” as they are “Mom-friendly.”
• Understand that parenting is not gender-specific.
• As systems’ liaisons, bridge communication to emphasize that Dads are parents too!

Organization Roots and Overview

• Halbert Sullivan, President and CEO, founded the Fathers’ Support Center (FSC) in 1997 and has long recognized the importance of women’s work in the fatherhood field.
  - The original idea for FSC came while he was working as a social worker for St. Louis Public Schools, when Doris Stoehner and Sue Breslauer asked him to help address the issue of absentee fathers and children living in poverty.
  - The program’s first facilitator was Sister Carol Schumer, who has been on staff for 19 years, and there are women working in all areas of the agency.

• Since 1997, FSC has served almost 15,000 fathers and their families.
  - 69% job placement rate.
  - In 2016, 75% of participating fathers reported improved relationships with their children and, on a $3.9 million budget, FSC’s return on investment to the St. Louis community totaled more than $13.5 million.

  ▪ Female staff facilitate other classes.
    o E.g., parenting skills, health and wellness.

• Legal team is all female attorneys.
  ▪ Help fathers with paperwork, understanding of legal issues.
    o E.g., child support, custody, visitation.

• Social workers are male and female.
  ▪ Female therapists can help men see and acknowledge personal issues they may not share with male staff.
Some General Observations

The Bottom line:

• You can’t always gauge how messages will be received based on the gender of the provider.
  ▪ It’s all about skill, empathy, and ability to communicate with men from diverse backgrounds.
    o Male/female teams can increase program effectiveness.
    o It’s all about working together to help our clients.
Practical Tips for Female Fatherhood Staff

Maintain professional boundaries
• Be clear about roles.
• Expect respect from your clients.
• Be aware of how you dress, how you present yourself.

Establish credibility as facilitator or case manager
• Show that you care and can help (resources, connections, advocacy).

Demonstrate honesty and empathy
• We are about the business of treating trauma … not punishing poverty!
